It is designed to collect and process information that users provide about their equipment and the processes it performs. It is very widely used in various industries, such as construction, metallurgy, mechanical engineering and energy. Through this software, various technological processes and systems are controlled. Exporting Drawings to Auto CAD 9.0 (Standard Applications) In order to request the required drawing in a standard format, you must right-click on the drawing image, select "Export to Autodesk", a window with settings will open, where you must click the "Save As" button. After that, we save typical files in DWG or DXF format. If the drawing needs to be saved in JPG format, a window will automatically open in which a graph view will be created. In it, you need to create a shape that can be called the icon of the project. The figure below shows a view of the graph of the designed product and its profile view. To complete the export of all drawings, you must click the appropriate "Download as" button and select the file that is in the "Export to Autocad 9.5 (Standard Applications)" window and click the save button.
